OVERVIEW

Pauline Oosterhoff, PhD, MA, MPH has over 25 years' international experience in pioneering research, advisory services, management and arts production on SRHR, health, human rights and development themes. She has worked with civil society, UN, public and private donors, universities, the private sector and the creative industry. She enjoys using health as an entry point to examine the reproduction of public secrets. Pauline has a strong record with the engagement of discriminated and vilified groups in development and humanitarian responses.

Her academic research on development is grounded in program management in emergency and development settings. Her public engagement is evidence-informed and creative, building upon her experience in arts production.

Most of Pauline's current work at IDS is focused on innovations and transdisciplinary research, monitoring, evaluation and learning. She relishes using mixed and participatory methods and collaborations between researchers, communities of practice, citizens and artists. She is a member of the IDS Ethical Research Board.

Pauline has masters' degrees in both political science and international public health, a PhD in medical anthropology and studies part-time Expanded Painting at the Gerrit Rietveld Academy.
